

BEST MANAGEMENT PRACTICES (BMP) MATERIALS RESOURCE LIST

The following is a comprehensive list of local businesses that sell erosion control and landscaping products. The Tahoe Regional Planning Agency (TRPA) does not endorse any company on this resource list, nor does TRPA endorse any product sold by any company on this resource list. All companies provide to the public unless otherwise noted.

Gravel / Rock

Gravel and rock may be used to dissipate energy from water falling from roof drip lines, to create temporary holding areas for run-off (drywells), or to stabilize slopes (rip-rap). Gravel used for infiltration trenches and drywells should be 3/4" to 3" in diameter and should be free of fine sediment and debris.

Native Plants

Native or adapted plants are an important part of any BMP landscaping plan. Native and adapted plants generally require little fertilizer, are drought tolerant, and play an important role in soil stabilization. Please refer to Chapter 7 of the Home Landscaping Guide for Lake Tahoe and Vicinity for a complete Recommended Plant List.

Organic Mulch

The term “mulch” describes a loose ground cover that protects the soil surface from wind and water erosion. Types of organic mulches include bark, wood chips and pine needles. Organic mulch should not be in direct contact with structures, as it may compromise the structure’s defensible space.

Temporary BMPs

According to the TRPA Handbook of Best Management Practices, temporary BMPs are practices and structures used to prevent or minimize erosion and sedimentation before and during construction and until permanent BMPs have been installed. Materials often used in the construction of temporary BMPs include filter fences, fiber roll barriers, erosion control blankets, and drop inlet filters.

Prefabricated Drywell Products

Prefabricated infiltration systems consist of proprietary BMP product materials that have a large percent void space. They are typically wrapped in a geo-textile fabric and placed in an excavated hole in the ground. The primary benefits from choosing a prefabricated product over gravel is the smaller space required to store water and the relatively simple maintenance.

Channel Drain Materials

A channel drain is a grated conveyance structure, seated flush with the surface of a driveway, that transports water underground to an infiltration system or vegetation. Slotted drains are often the most effective conveyance structure and do not interfere with snow removal. For ease of maintenance, choose a brand that has removable grates.
